The following is a statement from Mickey Blashfield, director of The People Should Decide ballot committee, responding to Governor Snyder's media event.

"At long last, we welcome Governor Snyder out into the public debate. Whether a government bridge will ever be built, it is the PEOPLE who should decide."

"Beyond a press event, the governor needs to make his best case for his government bridge. The Michigan legislature, after reviewing all the facts, was not convinced. Now hardworking taxpayers will vote in November whether they trust him. We believe the people want and deserve to have a vote about such an important issue."

The People Should Decide is a statewide ballot initiative that to require any government proposals to build additional international crossings in Michigan be approved by the voters first. Petitions are being circulated for Michigan residents to sign in order to place the question of whether or not they want to assume the liability for a new publicly funded bridge on the November ballot.
